One of women and men's greatest annoyances is embarrassing, unwanted hair. Sure, they could go through life shaving and waxing, dealing with the unpleasant side effects like bumps, burns, redness and ingrown hairs. But Dr. Jay Kulkin, founder and president of Women's Institute for Health PC, knows there is another, better way: Laser Hair Removal. In fact, Women's Institute for Health is the only Atlanta doctor's practice specializing in laser hair removal.

Founded in 2002, the institute is the only Atlanta medical spa facility nationally recognized for excellence in the procedure. Kulkin, who is a board-certified gynecologist, teaches his laser techniques to doctors around the world and has almost 20 years of laser experience. So why go to Women's Institute for Health PC instead of any other laser clinic in the city? The center represents the best of the spa and medical worlds, boasting the feel of a spa and the expertise of a doctor. "There are lots of places that offer laser hair removal," Kulkin says, "but there are none with the extensive experience that we have." They have successfully performed more than 17,000 sessions with no major complications. "We know that we have a quality product," Kulkin says.

Most of Kulkin's competitors are laser franchises who employ a medical director to oversee the facility but are only present a few hours each week. In comparison, Kulkin is in the office five days a week, all day, to ensure that each client receives the utmost attention and care. In fact, Kulkin says, with medical boards around the country currently passing stricter regulations, "many of the places operating in Georgia right now would not be allowed to operate in Texas and California." With laser packages that start at $415, the center is committed to health, comfort, satisfaction and results.
